IGNASI ABALLÍ - Translations

On pourrait prendre comme point de départ pour Translations, la quatrième exposition personnelle d'Ignasi Aballí à la galerie, sa vidéo Repaint Miró (salle de droite) qui, projetée sur deux écrans, montre une restauratrice qui recouvre complètement de blanc une sculpture en bronze de Joan Miró avant de la repeindre dans ses couleurs originelles. Cet acte d'effacement total (sculpture blanche sur fond blanc) avant de redonner son éclat à une œuvre d'un autre artiste est à la fois absurde et à la fois décrit le mode opératoire d'Aballí. Sous une couverture comico-sérieuse, il questionne le voir et les apparences. Dans cette vidéo, il invoque l'histoire de l'art (Miro bien entendu mais aussi Rauschenberg avec son fameux Erased De Kooning) en soulignant sa fragilité, ses codes et ses certitudes. Son geste, qui pourrait être perçu comme iconoclaste, ouvre de multiples interprétations.

L'effacement est une notion récurrente dans la pratique de l'artiste et se retrouve par exemple dans la série Slides qui montre des diapositives apposées sur les fenêtres de son atelier qui se sont décolorées sous l'action prolongée du soleil. On découvre des Vermeer, Fragonard, Picasso, Miro, Kawara, Burden livides, exsangues. Une fenêtre est une ouverture dans un mur qui permet de voir l'extérieur ou de faire voir l'intérieur. La fenêtre est la métaphore même de la peinture. En exposant l'histoire de l'art sur une fenêtre, Aballí nous livre des natures mortes contemporaines. Tout en dédoublant le propos des artistes, il dévoile le spectacle du temps qui efface implacablement les contours et les détails pour ne laisser apparaître que les reliefs des contrastes, que le 'squelette des œuvres'.

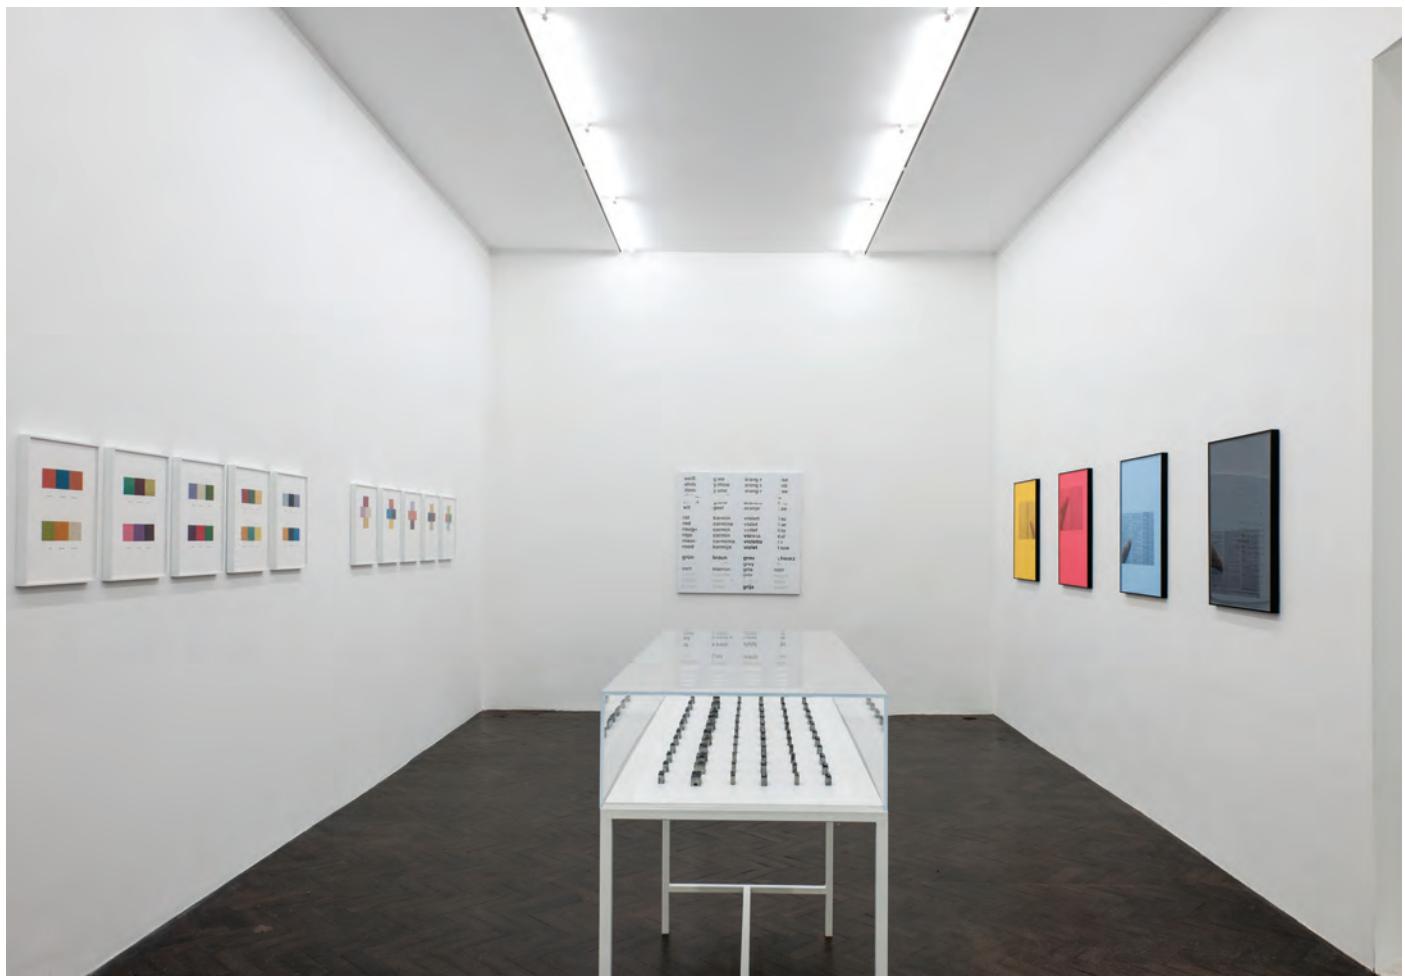

Il est aussi question de disparition dans Transparent Paint qui montre littéralement la peau de la peinture et, par transparence, son ossature (sous la forme du châssis). Dans un acte de mise à nu, il présente ce qui la fait tenir devant notre regard, comme on tient debout devant l'autre. Peindre c'est extirper depuis l'obscurité et faire apparaître. C'est aussi par la transparence révéler la pellicule ténue qui recouvre toute chose.

Autre questionnement de la vanité avec le miroir peint au TyppEx dans la salle de gauche. Presqu'entièrement recouvert de cette pâte correctrice blanche, Aballí a pris soin de révéler les noms des couleurs les plus communes avec la technique de la réserve. Le titre Wrong colours souligne que le reflet peut mentir suivant le point de vue. La vitrine 66 colours montre, quant à elle, des caractères d'imprimerie reproduisant les noms de 11 couleurs dans 6 langues et typographies différentes. Ces caractères en métal gris foncé agencés comme des architectures utopistes redissent la prépondérance du point de vue et incitent à lire les choses à l'envers pour les comprendre à l'endroit.

Les photos de la série Filters montrent un doigt désignant un mot dans le dictionnaire ayant trait à la vision ou la traduction. En plaçant les photos derrière un plexi coloré (d'une part CMYK, d'autre part rouge et vert comme pour les lunettes 3D), Aballí allie couleur et transparence et joue sur les phénomènes de la perception. Il y a une pirouette tautologique quand il nous donne à voir un doigt montrant le mot vision... L'utilisation du langage est prépondérante dans le travail de l'artiste mais toujours à des fins d'exploration des structures. Elever un édifice ne m'intéresse pas. Ce qui m'intéresse est d'avoir devant moi, transparents, les fondements des édifices possibles (Wittgenstein).

Enfin, la série Translation of a Japanese dictionary of colour combination, qui accentue le titre de l'exposition, est constituée de collages qui reconstituent le plus fidèlement possible des associations de couleur organisées par l'artiste et designer japonais Sanzo Wada (1883-1967). Aballí travaille comme un peintre avec sa palette, choisissant minutieusement ses couleurs parmi des milliers d'échantillons monochromes découpés depuis plus de 15 ans dans les journaux quotidiens. En regroupant, étalonnant et classant ces coupures de presse abstraites (car non figuratives mais abstraites aussi parce qu'elles se réfèrent à une image de la réalité qui nous est désormais inconnue), Aballí recrée des combinaisons qui nous invitent à composer des propositions colorées du réel.

Ignasi Aballí est né à Barcelone (Espagne) en 1958, où il habite et travaille. Aballí a reçu le prestigieux prix Joan Miró en 2015, à la suite duquel une exposition solo de son travail s'est tenue à la Fundació Joan Miró en 2016. Invité régulièrement à participer à des Biennales (Venise, Gwangju, Sydney), il a été mis à l'honneur à l'automne 2015 au Museo Nacional de Arte Reina Sofia à Madrid. Une exposition itinérante couvrant la période 1995-2015 a tourné entre le MACBA de Barcelone (Espagne), l'IKON de Birmingham (GB), le ZKM de Karlsruhe (Allemagne). Récemment son travail a été montré dans des expositions solo au Museo de Arte de la Universidad Nacional de Colombia, Bogotá (Colombie), à Proyecto Paralelo, Mexico City (Mexique) et à Nordenhake (Berlin, Allemagne).

Ignasi Aballí Without Beginning/Without End

Museo Nacional Centro de Arte Reina Sofía, Madrid 28 October – 27 March

Ignasi Aballí is one of the few artists to have successfully reinstated the formal, linguistic and social enquiries of early Conceptualism, investing them with contemporary relevance, a leavening humour and a grasp of contemporary technology that, in his films, drags those silent one-reelers of the 1960s and 70s into the present. Employing numerous media and methods of display, the investigations of the fifty-seven-year-old Barcelonan artist – who has won the 2015 Joan Miró Prize – encompass art history, painting, books, the media, photography, installation and, yes, film and video.

In a series represented by Dust (10 years in the studio) (2005), Aballí literally turns dust into an artform, leaving canvases to collect the grime of the studio for protracted periods. The exhibition could have focused more on this seminal series, as it provides an easy entrée into two of the artist's main themes: time and accumulation. In the 'newspaper' series, specific words cut from a national paper's headlines are reassembled as collaged lists, establishing taxonomies and timeframes that critique the media's supposed objectivity. For example, in 2012–13 the USA was referenced over 600 times compared to Estonia's solitary inclusion. While exposing surprising political and linguistic relationships, here – as in Aballí's 2015 thesauruslike compendiums of descriptive terms for basic colours – this linkage becomes an exhaustive cataloguing of thematic variations. The sheer overload leads to a paradoxical redundancy of meaning, returning information to the status of objecthood.

This underpinning sense of absence within presence – or, conversely, an existential quest for meaning within nothingness – was first developed from the 1980s in the 'resin paintings' (acrylic gel), again underrepresented, in which a semitransparent patina stands in for the picture plane. The theme continues in pages extracted from books, leaving only those with an index or chapter numbers as an armature upon which to reconstruct the absent whole. Elsewhere, an art-history lecture is assembled from slides bleached to incoherence by lengthy exposure to sunlight.

Referencing 1960s experimental film-making, light – cinema's fundamental medium – is again the point of enquiry in Film Projection (2012), where the camera looks directly into the projector lens during a screening. An indexical relation to the ongoing movie is maintained, but any sense of narrative is lost as the image deconstructs into an ethereal, undulating incandescence.

Much of Aballí's work addresses the specifics of museological display, such as titles simply identifying the white in which a wall is painted. Photographed corners in Amsterdam reveal the confluence of streets named after famous artists in a parody of the 'arbitrary' conjuncions between artists' works in museums. In a further photographic series, typical museum signage warns us not to touch or of CCTV surveillance, but we are never quite sure if these are actively addressed to us or are passive images subsumed within the exhibition. Building on this in-between status, vitrines become art objects in their own right. Bearing self-referential texts and images, they continually return us to their Plexiglas corporeality in an unending conceptual loop that vacillates between art as messenger and as the thing-in-itself.

Foregrounding the display inevitably broaches the age-old relationship between museum approbation and commercial value. Again, this is approached with understated humour: here, eight monochrome 'paintings' – standard fare for the modern museum – are composed from shredded banknotes. The colour of money initially equates with face value; the context reminds us that it is institutional approval that confers commercial worth.

While Aballí's plural concerns are compressed like his shredded banknotes, though in more denominations, common threads weaving between different series turn a cacophony into a rich and coherent tapestry of provocative questions. Crystallising the interdependence of absence and presence, finality and processes without end, Aballí achieves this with a subtlety and economy that pays reverent homage to its conceptual lineage.
